

Sharing Stories/ Compartiendo Historias

The Community Health Promotions Department at Robert Wood Johnson University Hospital developed a Breast Cancer Awareness Theater project, Sharing Stories/Compartiendo Historias, to promote breast cancer awareness among minority women. Through the use of skits, monologues and improvisation, the program addresses many of the fears and myths women experience. Sharing Stories can be provided as a bilingual performance when appropriate, and is followed by an educational presentation. There is also a Q & A period and a post evaluation.

Sharing Stories has been presented for many community groups and organizations in the Middlesex County, facilitating referrals for free screening mammograms for minority women in central New Jersey.

To schedule a presentation at your organization or for more information please contact Yanin Suarez at (732) 247-2050 or email at Yanin.Suarez@rwjuh.edu.
